Stretching The Mind

Direction 1

The brand direction 'Stretching The Mind' is about visually depicting what Mind, Body, Health & Politics encourages its listeners to do; to expand their consciousness and stretch their minds to consider and explore novels ideas relating to all facets of modern life. By discussing topics that defy conventional rules of conversation—erectile dysfunction, psychedelics, the hidden side of antidepressants—Mind, Body, Health & Politics provides listeners with the opportunity to learn about topics that have a direct impact on their lives but that extend beyond what mainstream media will discuss.

The wordmark is set in Bicyletta, a geometric sans serif typeface. The absence of serifs makes the logo feel approachable. The uppercase letters suggest authority and credibility, and lend an air of gravitas. The stretched letters feel playful and whimsical, and reflect MBH&P's commitment to helping its listeners expand their minds. Lastly, the stretched letter forms are unexpected and elicit curiosity. The conversation bubble reflect the show's conversational format as well as its goal to encourage community.

Inter, a sans serif Google-compatible font, pairs well with the playful letterforms of the wordmark; The type is friendly and conversational. It feels laidWWW∑ back without appearing apathetic.

Source Serif Pro, another Google-compatible font, keeps this brand direction from appearing 'too comfortable.' The serifs of this font bestow the visual look and feel with authority and credibility, which subtly balances the whimsy of the logo.

Yellow is associated with intellect; Orange is associated with warmth and positivity.

Turquoise is associated with communication and clarity. It's also energizing and feels fresh.

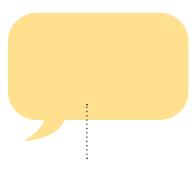

Black is sophisticated and authoritative.

White is clean and crisp. It's a nice antidote to the bright yellow-orange and turquoise.

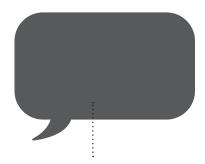

This color palette is bright and vibrant—not what you might expect from an intellectual radio show, and that's the point. This color combination conveys energy and excitement, and it feels edgy.

A toned-down yellow gives the palette some dimension, which is especially useful for website buttons.

A toned-down turquoise, like a toned-down yellow, gives the palette more dimension.

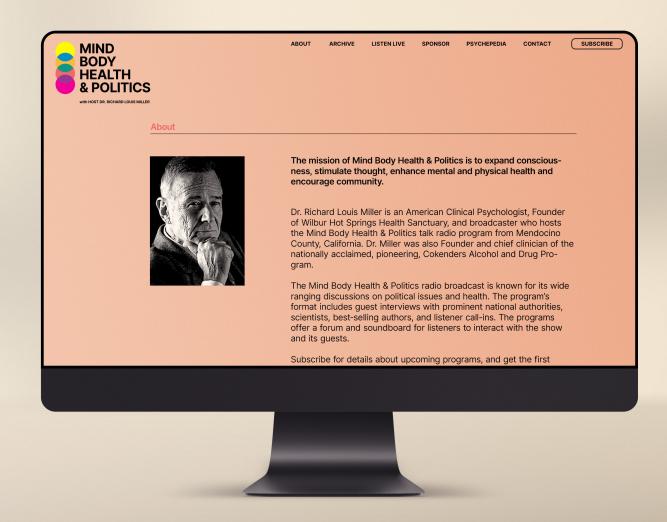

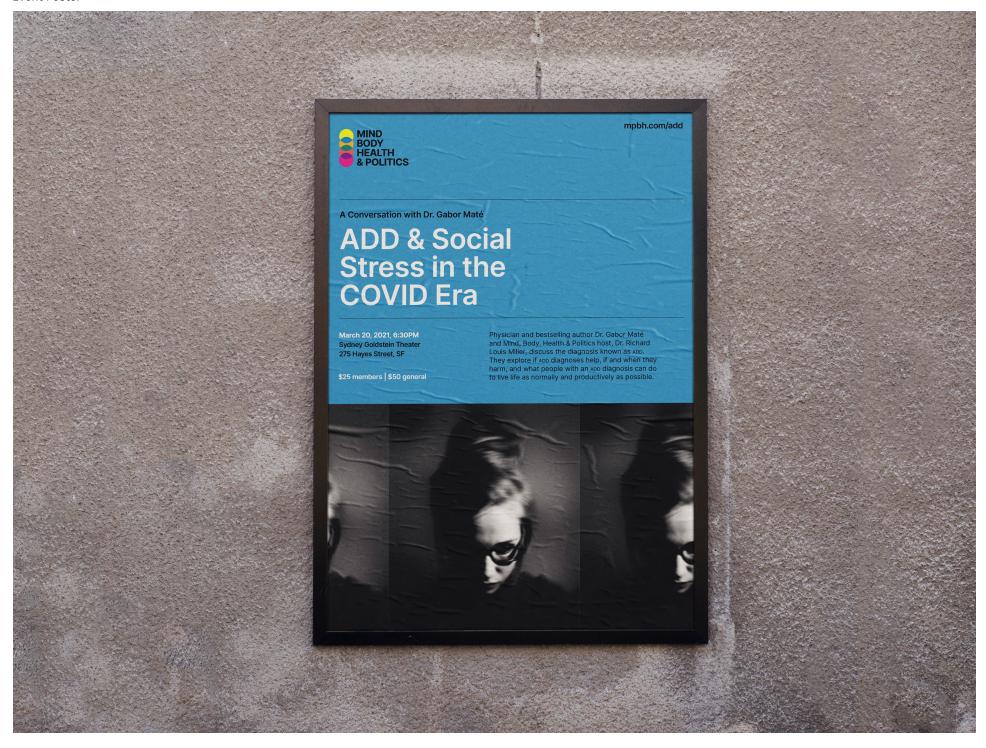

Text gray keeps content from getting too heavy.

Where does a health problem stop and physical distress begin? If a political issue impacts our day-to-day, why wouldn't it impact us mentally, too? 'Continuum' is about the ways in which factors relating to the mind, body, health, and political climate intermingle and contribute to the texture of our lives. Mind, Body, Health & Politics tunes listeners into subject matter they might not encounter elsewhere. This collective enlightening that listeners experience awakens them to new ways of seeing the world, and themselves, which is exciting and stimulating. 'Continuum' seeks to convey the interplay between mind, body, health, and politics, as well as reflect the vibrancy that remains to be unlocked in life when we can expand consciousness and improve our wellbeing.

The wordmark is set in Inter, a sleek sans serif typeface that feels clean, modern, and authoritative. The circles on the left represent the four subjects discussed on the show. Their overlap symbolizes how every issue affecting the mind, body, health or political climate has a mental, physical and political perspective. Circles are known for being harmonious and therefore reflects the show's dedication to community. The way the colors increase from magenta to yellow feels like a rising sun or enlightenment.

Inter comes in many weights (extra thin, thin, light, regular, medium, semibold, bold, black) making it a great stand-alone font. The clean lines and open counter spaces of the lowercase letters o, a, e, b, d, and p make this font feel friendly and approachable. Moreover, the simplicity of Inter feels slightly austere, imparting an air of authority and sophistication into an otherwise bright, modern, and minimalist brand direction.

This color palette is bright and vibrant. Its use of warm colors evokes passion, movement, and action, while the cool colors provide a soothing balance of trust, dependability, and clarity. Their vividness is inspired by psychedelics. Each color can be toned down for use as a background that doesn't compromise legibility.

Thank you.
